

Thalamocortical Interactions

Murray Sherman

University of Chicago, United States of America

New evidence indicates that cortical areas are often connected in parallel by direct and transthalamic pathways. Furthermore, information relayed by these and other thalamic relays is shared via branching axons with other subcortical sites that are often motor centers, suggesting that much information relayed by thalamus are efference copies.